FROM THE NOTEBOOK OF BEN URICH:

I'd never have believed it. Even now I have trouble writing about it. Heck, I'm still having trouble thinking about it. Norman Osborn, our self-sacrificing top-cop, dropped a bunch of "heroes" into Chicago to attack the Asgardian god Volstagg. The result was horrific with thousands dead in the backlash. My old news buddy Will Stern got me to "ground zero" and we stumbled across Volstagg along the way. Together, we embarked on a road trip to Oklahoma for Volstagg to receive divine judgement, and for us to report on the next phase of Osborn's machinations.

All along the way, I've been interviewing people we've met and they're all saying the same name: Todd Keller. He's got everybody sold that Osborn's way of thinking is the right way of thinking. I wouldn't be surprised if Osborn's feeding him his info; controlling the news...

We hit a H.A.M.M.E.R. roadblock just outside Oklahoma City checking for, no surprise, the well-girthed Asgardian god crammed in our backseat. Volstagg joined the gathered agents in battle and took off into the sky. Will and I, trying to make a break for it, ended up arrested. Once we reached the local Air Force base, Will and I managed to get away on foot. Maybe Volstagg had the right idea...
